

1. The first group of people who are interested in the results of the study are the researchers themselves. They want to know how well the study was conducted and whether the results are reliable.

2. The second group of people who are interested in the results of the study are the participants. They want to know how their data was used and whether the results are accurate.

3. The third group of people who are interested in the results of the study are the reviewers. They want to know how the study was evaluated and whether the results are valid.

4. The fourth group of people who are interested in the results of the study are the readers. They want to know how the study was presented and whether the results are clear.

5. The fifth group of people who are interested in the results of the study are the stakeholders. They want to know how the study was used and whether the results are useful.

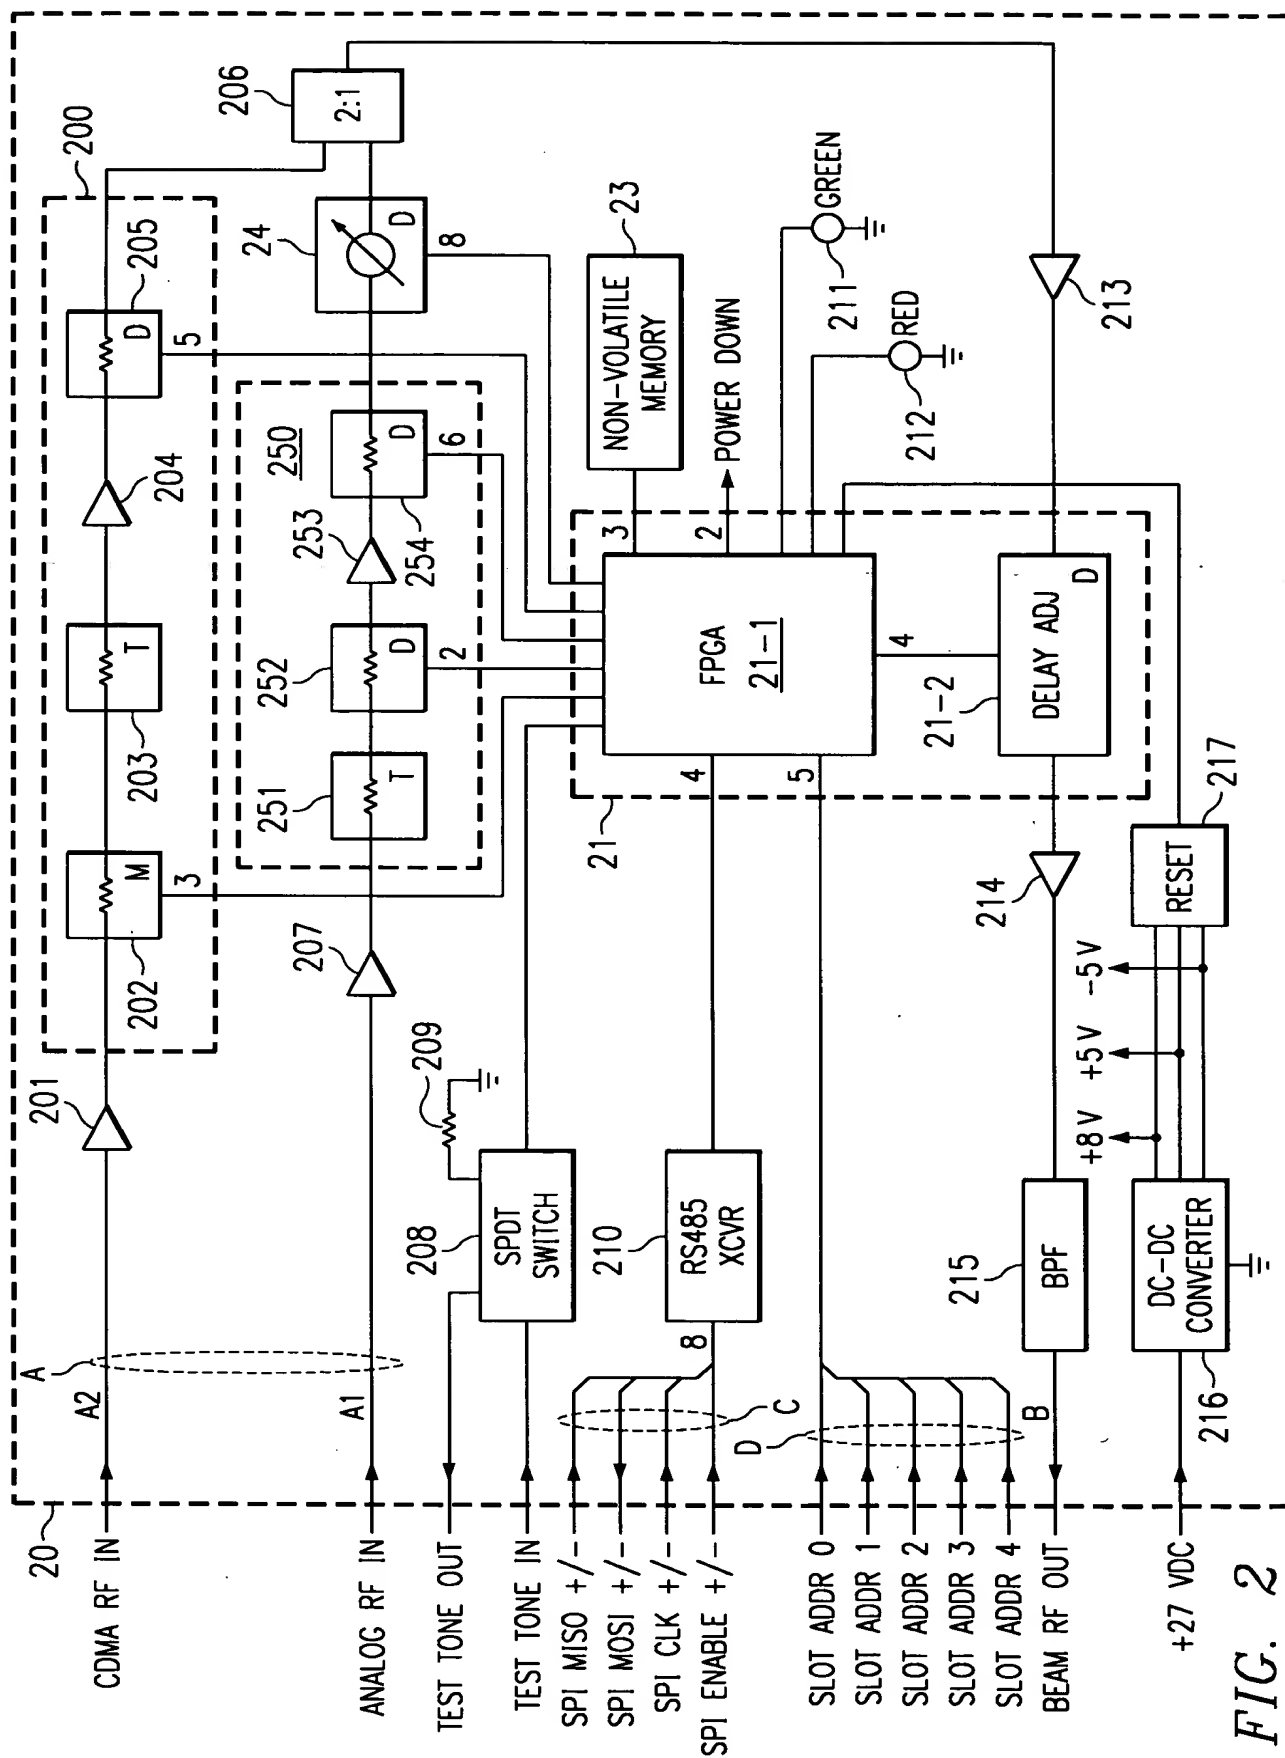

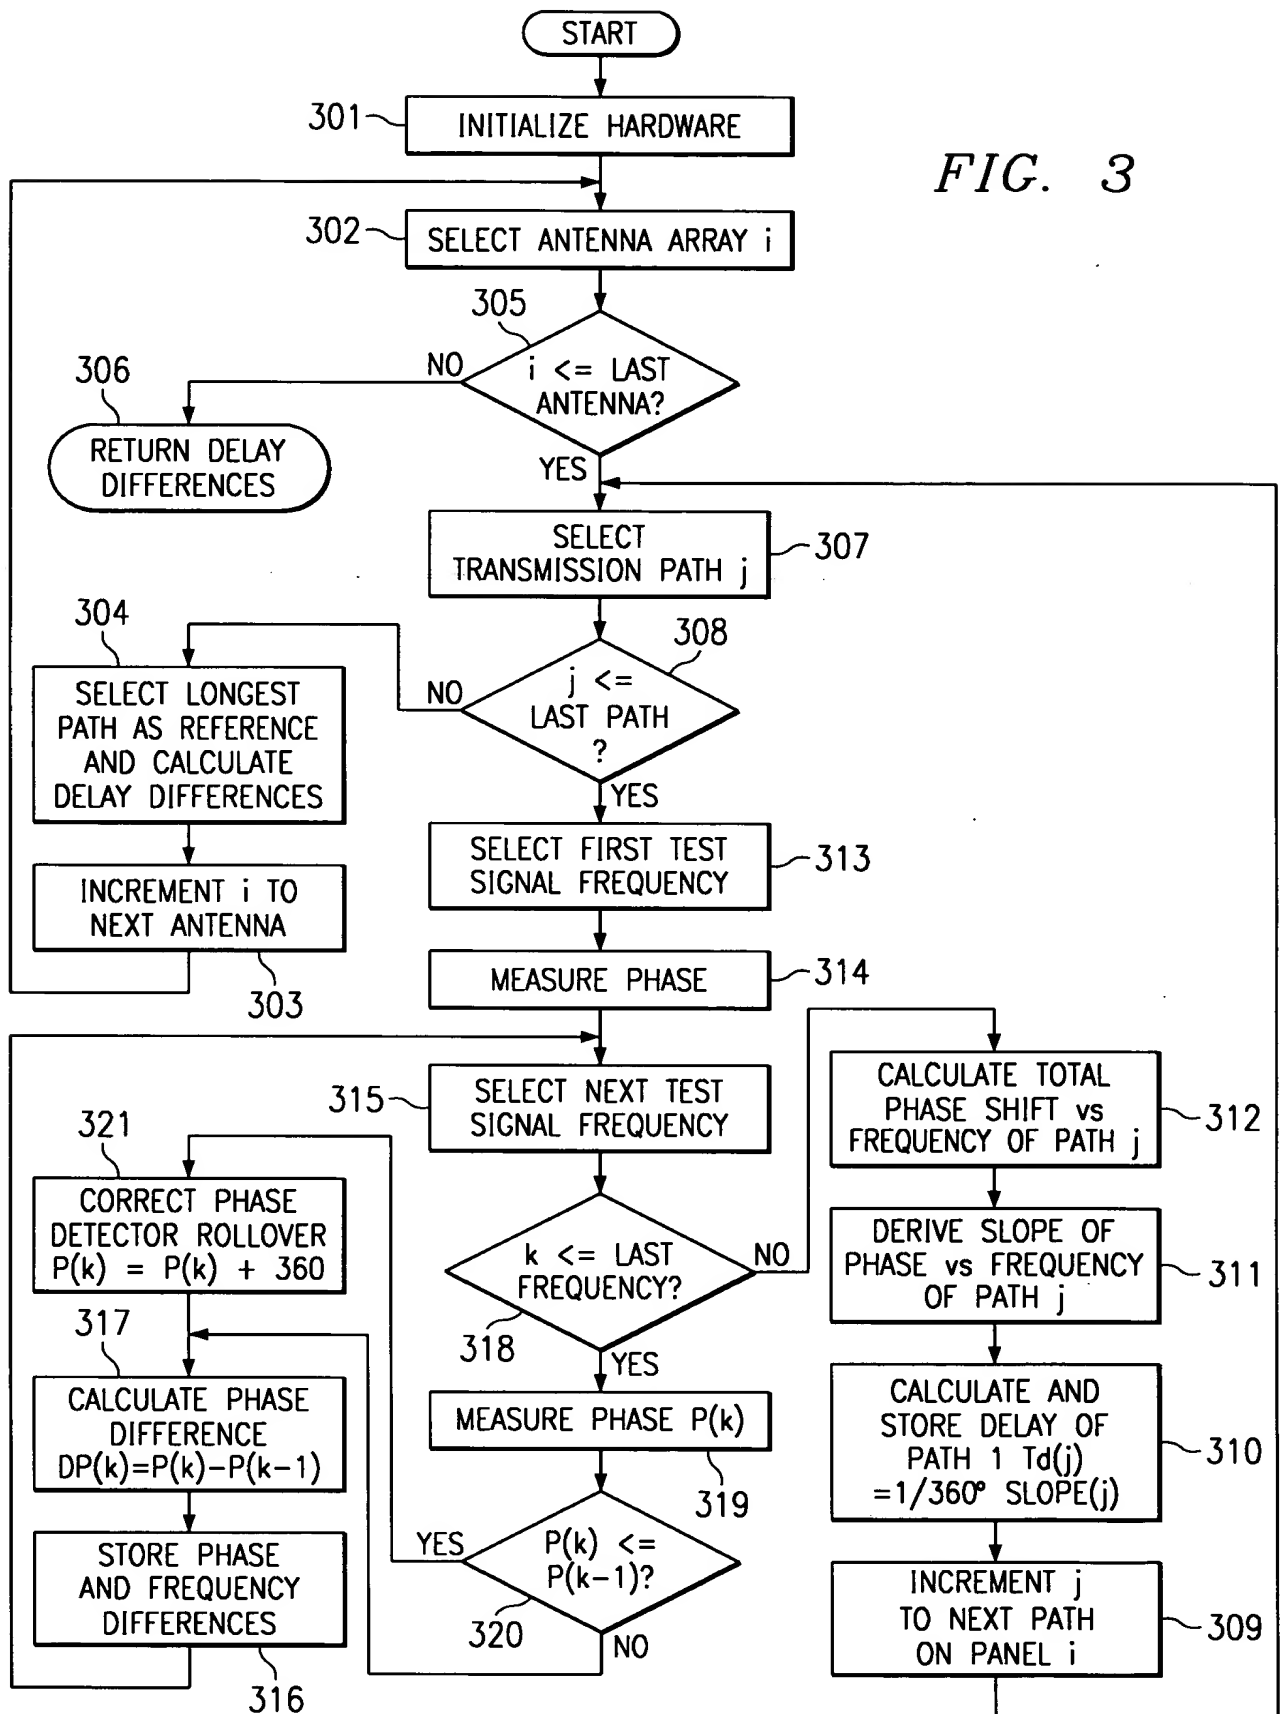

FIG. 3

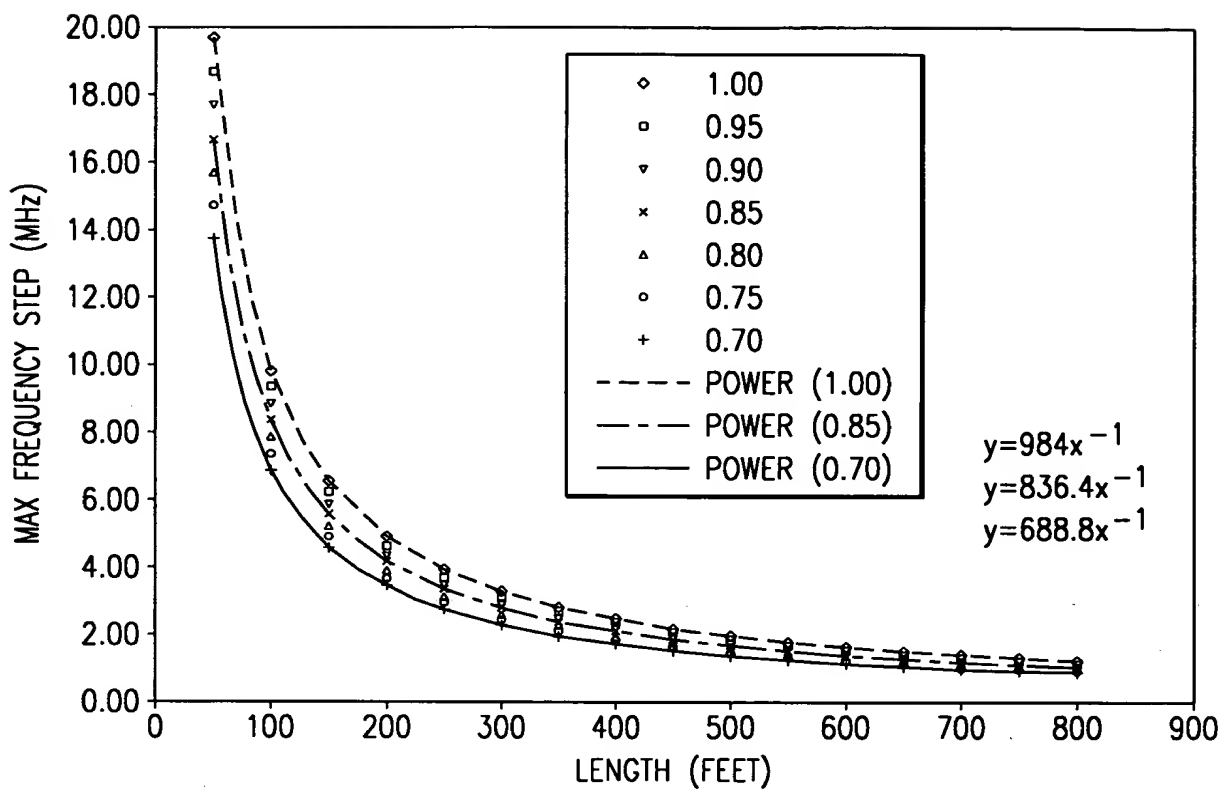

FIG. 4

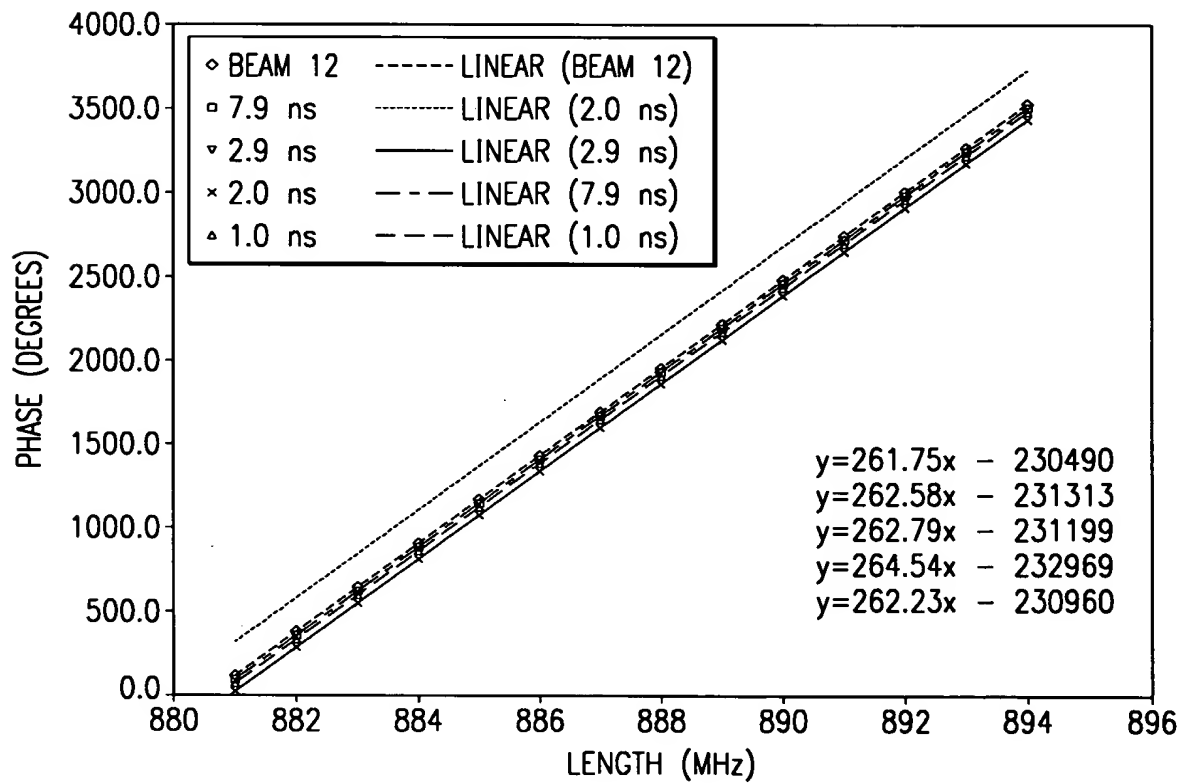

FIG. 5